Letter from Chasseur.

[Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.] RICHMOND, Va., May 31 - 1 he recout municipal election in May has had a good effect throughout the State, for it has shown couclusively that the conservative readjusters as a mass will not oust good men from offices which they have filled faithfully, merely because they disagree with them on a question of finance. The action of the democratic convention, which assembled here on the 19.h, in extending to all the readjusters the right hand of fellowship has had a potent effect. It has harmonized many conflicting elements, and has secured, to a cartainly, the electoral vote of the State, no matter what the action of Mahone's convention, which assembles here on the 7 h of July, may do; that is, of course, if Tilden is not the democratic nominee. There is a deep, hitter feeling, so deep and hitter among the masses of the people regarding that man, it almost surpasses belief, and the idea that Virginia would vote for him if he was neminated is the veriest bosh and twaddle. He was elected ouce and did not take his cat. Suppress he was elected again and Grant was bent on being manufurated. why, what show would this timid, perslytic old man have? The man that told Mr. Abraham Hewitt that he would rather see Mr. Hayes insuguraged than to have a drop of blood spilt. Yes, what show would be have against that man of tow ring ambition, unse upulous purpose and iron nerve. How many Southern democrats would vote for Tilden if he was, by the stupendous folly of the party, nominated as our standard bearer? Just about as many as voted for Greeley eight years sgo. Fortunately, very fortunately, the two thirds rule will be in force in Ciccionati, and Mr. Tilden, while he has the majority, cannot get the requisite number, unless the gods first make mad those whom they des roy. Rienwood is one of the most beautiful cities on the continent, but it is also the direct. The press are rarely cleaned and never swept and watered, and the consequence is that the slightest wind raises a cloud of dust that makes it like a Siroceo only instead of the desert sand; a horrible usclean mixture sweeps in blinding clouds through the air and makes the unfortunate waylarer think he is pas-ing through a guano factory.

What a study hotel life is! One sees so many different kinds of people, and can waich with a carious zest all that is going on around him. The hotels in Richmond are generally well kept, and the prices are moderate. After close observation I have come to the conclusion that the hotel owes its success to the managing olerk, the same as a bank is made or broken by its cashier. A good clerk our fill a het land keep up a splendied custom, when a bad one would empty the house, no matter what the proprietors do. It requires an impercurbable temper, a knowledge of everything that is 10. ing on, a quick versatility of resource, tact, and above all an ever yielding a flow of cordislity. This fact is illustrated in the St. Claire Hotel, io this city. It never notil lately got along, though its situation is by far the best in Rich mond; its porches wide and spacious, looking out on the square. It was sold and resold several times, and never made money, until about s year ago, Captain Oliver Funsten took hold f it, and if there ever was a man who was intended by nature for the place, he is that one. He can answer ten questions to as many different people at the same time; he sees everything and hears everything, too; he can make every guest feel that he has a sudden and undying triendship for him, and has that art of "savoir faire" to perfection. He can give every one a shoice room, and make all feel satisfied, and the St. Claire to day, through his efforts, is the best paying concern in the city. He is so good natured and desirous to oblige as well as to bring congenial people togather, that he gets them in a laughable fix sometimes, and this is a case in point : There were two gentlemen who dropped in to board not very long age; one was a Mr. Jones, or at least I will call him so. Now Jones was an artist, and played on a violin, or rather the fildle, and plays well too, with taste and ex-pression. Mr. Smith is also a musician but an amateur, and performs on the valve trumpet. Mr. Jones having a room on the first floor, the clerk thought to put these two lovers of the arts as close together as he could, so he placed Mr. Smith on the ground floor directly beneath with a stair steps running near where these musicians could harmonize if they wanted to but Mr. Jones abomicated the trumpet which in the uoskillful hands sounded worse than the Jacobin "Ca Ira" in the ears of the poblesse About one o'clock every night, or rather every morning would Mr. Smith puff and blow the air from Pinafore- 'Farewell Mahone," other sentimental bailads. This Mr. Jones bore, until he could bear it no longer, when he addressed the following note to the trumpet player:

ST. CLAIRE HOTEL, Friday morning. Mr. Jones presents his compliments to Mr. Smith and requests he will discontinue to blow his trumpet at so unseasonable an hour as one o'clock a. m. Mr. Jones begs leave to say that he has not had a wink of sleep for the last week

To this Mr Smith raplied : ST. CLAIRE HOTEL Tuesday evening.

Mr. Smith presents his compliments to Mr. Jones and respectfully replies that he has paid the rent of his room a week in advance and will play on his trampet whenever he damo pleases. P. S .- Mr. S believes that every man has : right to blow his own horo.

Here Mr. Jones was in a fix, but he wouldn't give up. So he invited a lot of boon companions to play cards, drink beer sing songs, and make all the racket they could. But this failed of its intended effect. Mr. Smith stuck to his trumpet, and would chime in with his songs and rap the floor with the heels could until Mr. Smith ceased his music and retired to rest; Mr. Jones then would commence to roll a flour barrel filled with paving stones over the floor, and kicking up all corts of noises.

This was too much for Mr Smith, and he wrote

'St. Clair Hotel, 2 o'clock p. m.

"Mr. Smith trusts that he has only to remind Mr. Jones of the very improper and annoying course which he unreasonably and unseasonably pursues to cause him at once and forever to abandon it"

To which Mr. Jones laconically replies:

'ST. CLAIR HOTEL, 8 o'clock a. m. "Mr. Jones assures Mr. Smith that he never paid the first red cent for his room; he is as independent as a wood-sawyer, and all h-l can't prevent him from hicking up a muss if he chooses to. They appealed to Funsten and told their tale. He tried to smooth matters—all in vain. Mr. S. declared that he would play on his trumpet, and Mr. J. swore he would roll his barrel. In vain were persussions and arguments used; both stood firm. Any other person would have given up in despuir. Not so with our clerk of nexbau-tible resources. He slipped in the rooms when the compants were out and greased Mr. Jones' fiddle bow and abstracted the mouth piece from Mr. Smith's trumpet. Peacy reigned after this but both gentlemen charge each other with the trick, and say they will get even
